

THE CANTAB
circa 1899

Review of Songs of the Spirit

We have received for review a little book of poems entitled "Songs of the Spirit," by Aleister Crowley, whose initials "A. C." are not unknown to readers of "The Cantab" and "The Grants." Though we cannot identify ourselves with the sentiments expressed in its pages, we must acknowledge that the poems show very considerable literary merit. Here is a description of the Cam:

The corpse-lit river, whose dank vapours teem
Heavy and horrible, a deadly steam
Of murder's black intolerable might.
