

THE curious manuscript, whose translation, enriched with critical and anthropological notes, we now offer to scholars, is unique in the history of mystico-erotic literature. Under the figure of the amorous adventures of a Sufi Poet and his cupbearer, the relations between God and the soul are set forth.

The profoundest theories of occultism are divulged, while the study of manners affords an unique vision of the inner life of the Persian aristocracy.

Lyricaly this volume is worthy of Catullus; satirically it parallels Martial, Juvenal, and Petronius; mystically it transcends the Bhagavat Gita and the Tao Teh King.

We are not at liberty to reveal the identity of the distinguished scholars and travellers who have brought in their gilded argosies of verse and prose this choicest treasure of the East; but we can assure subscribers that their names, if revealed, would guarantee the excellence alike of recension, translation, and critical labour.

The volume will consist of over 100 pages of demy 8vo.

The edition:

10 copies on Japanese vellum, bound in limp vellum, ties (5 already sub- scribed for) . . . . .	10 guineas
200 copies on handmade paper, bound in parchment, ornamental design in arabesque (50 already subscribed for) . . . . .	2 guineas

The prices will be raised to 15 guineas and 3 guineas on publication.

Owing to the profoundly esoteric nature of the work, the circulation will be most strictly confined to bona-fide scholars of mysticism, anthropology, and the like.

PROBSTHAIN AND CO.

[This Prospectus may be taken as an example of the general appearance of the work.]